Corporate Communications, Inc. Wins Award in MarCom Competition

North Conway: Corporate Communications, Inc. recently won a “Gold” MarCom Creative Award for their design and copywriting of the White Mountain Waldorf School Capital Campaign brochure.

The MarCom Creative Awards is an awards competition administered and judged by the Association of Marketing and Communications Professionals. It is an international competition for marketing and communication professionals involved in the concept, writing, and design of marketing and communication programs, and print, visual and audio materials. Entries come from corporate marketing and communications individuals, advertising and PR firms, and production companies, including Fortune 500 conglomerates.

The international organization consists of several thousand marketing, communication, advertising, public relations, media production and freelance professionals. The Association oversees awards and recognition programs, provides judges and sets standards for excellence.

The Association of Marketing and Communication Professionals began in 1995 as a means to honor outstanding achievement and service to the communication profession. As part of its mission, the Association fosters and supports the efforts of marketing and communication professionals who contribute their unique talents to public service and charitable organizations.

As part of their charitable philosophy Corporate Communications, Inc. donates considerable time and money back into their local community by way of volunteerism, pro bono professional consultation, and outright donations of money to individuals, businesses and organizations that work to better Mt. Washington Valley.

“For the White Mountain Waldorf project,” explained Kimberly Beals, president of Corporate Communications, Inc., “we donated both time and money towards the production of the brochure in hopes that more children would be introduced to this unique educational experience. While I am thrilled beyond words for this recognition, I hope our success as their brochure’s designer helps raise money and awareness for their capital campaign for building a new expanded school on their land in Albany, New Hampshire.”
